PITTSBURGH TRIBUNE-REVIEW

“Between 1969 and 1974, the Weather Underground claimed responsibility for some 20 bombings in the United States – at police stations, banks, jails, courthouses, the Capitol and the Pentagon. Ayers became a fugitive in 1970, reports Andy McCarthy at the National Review, after three of his cohorts were ‘accidentally’ killed when the explosive they were building to Ayers’ specifications – Ayers was a bomb designer – went off during construction.”

The explosive, a nail bomb, “had been intended for detonation at a dance that was to be attended by army soldiers at Fort Dix, New Jersey,” reports McCarthy. “Ayers attested that the bomb would have done serious damage, tearing through windows and walls and, yes, people too.”

Obama Has Close Ties to Domestic Terrorist

Three decades ago, William Ayers founded a domestic terror organization called the "Weather Underground."

During his reign of terror, Ayers and his organization bombed the United States Capitol, the Pentagon, a judge's house and police stations.

His group was finally stopped when a bomb to be detonated at a U.S. Army dance prematurely exploded, putting Ayers on the run and his current wife on the FBI's Most Wanted list.

Then William Ayers became a friend, colleague and supporter of Barack Obama.
